Fragmentary Latin text on papyrus strips, likely from a manuscript. The text is arranged in approximately 10 horizontal columns. The script is a medieval cursive hand. Some fragments are clearly legible, such as "et deinde...", "quod...", "et...", "et...", "et...", "et...", "et...", "et...", "et...", "et...". The strips are of varying lengths and are arranged in a somewhat irregular pattern, suggesting they were once part of a larger document that has been fragmented.

Fragmentary Latin text on papyrus strips, likely from a scroll. The text is arranged in approximately 15 horizontal bands. The script is a formal Gothic bookhand. The strips are irregularly shaped, with some missing sections, particularly in the middle and lower portions. A vertical white strip is visible in the upper center, possibly a binding or repair. The text is dense and covers most of the width of each strip.

Three fragments of ancient papyrus scrolls with handwritten text in a cursive script, likely from the Nag Hammadi library. The fragments are arranged horizontally and show signs of age and wear.

The top fragment contains text such as: "Deo gratias agimus in omni tempore..." and "in nomine domini amen".

The middle fragment contains text such as: "in nomine domini amen" and "in nomine domini amen".

The bottom fragment contains text such as: "in nomine domini amen" and "in nomine domini amen".
