Badische Landesbibliothek Karlsruhe

Digitale Sammlung der Badischen Landesbibliothek Karlsruhe

A Treatise of Specters

Bromhall, Thomas [S.I.], 1658

Of the Dreams, Visions, Revelations, and other such kind of Legerdemanes and mockeries of Evil Spirits urn:nbn:de:bsz:31-96270

Of the Dreams, Visions, Revelations, and other such kind of Legerdemanes and mockeries of Evil Spirits.

Gamemnon, leader of the Greeks against Troy, when he had taken Briseides from Achilles, Theris interceding Jove for her son, that he would subject the Grecians to the Trojans, rill they really perceived, and found by wofull revenge, what loffe, trouble and vexation they had caused to Achilles, by their injurious dealing with him: Jupiter lends a dream to Agamemnon, wherein he commands him to draw out his Army, with xáv thou monin cupudy nvav redan, for now he should take Troy. Joue cannot lye, (mat he full well knew) yethe well faw that he could not take the City that day: Jupiter plaid or sported with him by the abstrule meaning of the word; for the adverb will, lignifies in the Greek, not onely prefent, but instant; and hath that latitude, that it fignifies past, and not much past; and to come, and not far off; Jupiter therefore meant by 70 min, the tenth year, which was then present, which was not long from the destruction of Tray. But Agamemnon interpreting, or construing his Dream to mean the prefent day, he drew out his Army immediately, and received a great overthrow: Iliados. B.

Tru King of the Perfians, leading an Army against the Massagetians, being at rest, dreamed, that he law Darius the cldest fon of Hystaspes, having two wings, with the one whereof he overshadowed Afia; and with the other, Europe. This Darius being twenty years of Age, at this time was left by his father at Ariffimentum in Persia; Cyrus awakened out of his dream, and suspended with this nocturnal vision; and casting many wayes what should be the meaning thereof; at last faid, That thereby was revealed to him from the gods, that Hystaspes and his fon Darius did lye in wait to furprife him and his Kingdom, he uled therefore his utmost endeavours to return into his own Countrey, the Massegetians being conquered, and leaves his fon in his place; but that Vision foretold, That Cyrus should be shortly overthrown, and that ere long Darius (hould obtain his Kingdom: which came to passe, aftera short reign of Cambyfes, which came between this and Darius his Conquest. Sabellieus, lib. 6. Ennead. 2.

Socrates

&c.

was immiy to drimile ex he would

th bim, and th were diftempor and edenomian, eat whole-

or foretell

nomition the mus Proclu is the ont

e Province

hat he had

y, not long

be judged

ction of his

te to pain:

A DEINIA

lagitian d

nd coming

e and la

norch, who

ne Souldien

ere he fait

sincus, of

ace of King

Epiphson, the Pax to

O King

Burgand

new telep

CETTAIN C

Socrates foresaw in his dreams, that his Scholler Plato would be an excellent Orator and Philosopher; for the day before (he being brought to him by his father) Socrates in his dream saw a white Swan sly into his bosome, which by his musicall striking of his wings, filled the Ayr; which Dream, as soon as Plato was brought to him, he declared. Pausanias in Atticis.

Topocrates in his Epistle to Philogomenes, relates his Dream I thus; That meditaring folicitously of Democritus, (to whom being called to cure the Abderitani, he faith, that health would meet him in the morning). I faw, quoth he, Esculapius, and as we were both before and even at the ports of the Abderitari, Afculapius appeared not, as his pictures speak him, mild and gentle, but with iqualid habit, and an horrid aspect; and there followed him Dragons, a fierce kind of creeping creatures, of huge length, wiffing in defarts and lawnes; he had in his company likewife, men that followed him with boxes of medicaments handfomely closed up: immediately he reacheth forth his hand to falute me, which, God knowes, I most joyfully imbraced; I defired to wait upon him, and to ferve him in his administring Physick; but he answered, for prefent 'twas not needful; for this goddels of mortals and immortals will conduct thee, being a stranger: Whereupon turning my felf, I beheld a goodly fair Lady neatly and gloriously adorned, about whose eyes there appeared such a circle of thining splendour, that exceeded the glorious brightnesse of Stars. He thereupon departed, but the Lady taking me kindly by the hand, leads me on a grave pace through the City; and when we approached near a house, wherein I thought I should have been entertained, she departed like a ghost, saying, To morrow I shall find you with Democritus. To whom as the was going away, I faid, Dear Lady who are you? and how may I call you? Truth, fayes the, but the that then feelt coming towards thee, (and prefently another Lady not uncomely appeared to me, of a more bold aspect, and more fierce) whose name the told me was Opinion, and that the lived with the Abderetani. When I therefore awaked from my Dream, I conceived the interpretation of it to be, That Democritus needs not a Physician, God departing from administring of Physick, when there is no matter or ficknesse which requires it; but that Truth, which alwayes dwelleth with Democritus, faith he, is in health; and that Opinion which faith he is fick, remaineth amongst the mad Abderetant.

A Lexander was descended from Hercules by Carinus, and from Lacem on his Mothers side by Neoptolemus, as it was verily thought. It is reported, that when Phillip King of Macedon sirst courted Olympiades, taken with her beauty, (by the help of her brother Arybba, whom Diodore in his sixteenth book calleth Arymba) whose friendship he obtained, he stole her away from her Panents, and of neptial right being detect a huge fire vall about, med, Thath leal, as it fet he declaring dreams, the his Wafe's for that the wot that the wot tarchw, in All

Sophocles of Called his Temple: A confelled his wherefore his name of Her

A Nnew Section of Castonio of Date of Date of Castonio of Date of Date

E ademas.

Macedo

Joly, but op

tyranny of

ficknels, the

ci, dreams

ci, dreams

affuted him

ly fick, should

Guy should

fhould go u

come to pa

leaith; th

was fomew

besets of I

ents

BLB

5.

rents, and married her, and that the night before they enjoyed nuprial rights, in a dream he thought he saw Jove touch his belly, being descended from Heaven in thunder; whereupon there was a huge fire which arose, and presently dispersed it tels into slames all about. The same Philip, a thort time after his marriage, dreamed, That he scaled his Wives belly, and that the sculpture of the seal, as it seemed to him, was the Image of a Lyon; which vision he declaring to some that took upon them the interpretation of dreams, they advised him to set a strict Watch or Guard upon his Wise; but Telemesus said, She would bring a Lyon-like child, for that no vain thing is to be scaled; therefore the dream signified, that she would have a child of persect animosity and courage. Plutarchus, in Alexandro.

Sophocles did often dream, that Hercules speaking to him by name, scalled him thief, because he had stoln a golden vessel out of his Temple. And that being detected and brought before the State, he confessed himself guilty of the thest whereof Hercules accused him; wherefore from that time ever after, the Temple was called by the name of Hercules his Temple. Fulgosus, lib. 1. cap. 5.

A Nneus Seneta, a Senator of Rome, being commanded by Claudius, the Emperour, to undertake the Tutor thip of Nero, as yet a child hopefull, by a towardly genius; the night after he received him, (as 'ris reported) he dreamed, that he had to his Scholler Caligula, whose famous cruelty had appeared to the World: Not long after the conditions and manners of Nero changing, or rather being detected, appearing, he proved himself to have a soul void of humanity; insomuch, that it was admired, because he was so like Caligula, how it could otherwise come to pass, but by the transmigration of Caligula, his soul out of Hell, into Nero. Petrarcha ex Suetonio & Dione.

Udemus a Cyprian, a familiar friend of Socrates, travelling into Macedonia, cometh to Phera, a rich and famous City of Theffaly, but oppressed and brought somewhat low, by the inhumane tyranny of one Alexander, he was there taken with fuch heavy ficknels, that Physicians despaired of his health; who thus afflicted, dreams, that he law a gallant young man, who coming to him, affured him of three things to come, That he, though now extreamly fick, should shortly recover his health; That the Tyrant of that City should dye within a few dayes; And that he within five years should go to his own Country. And the two first did manifestly come to passe accordingly; for he beyond all hopes recovered his health; the Tyrant was flain by his Wives brothers; the third was somewhat more obscure; for about the end of the fifth year, as he was going from Sicily, where he then lived, to Ciprus, he was taken out of this World by Wars at Syracufa: we find, that Interpresers of Dreams excuse the not coming of Eudemus home accord6.

7.

8.

Gg

III

would be

before (he

ream law a

this administration

S Plato Was

his Dream

(to whom

would meet

and as we

i, Estall-

lowed him gth, history

e-men that

closed up:

which, God

red, for pro-

nd immor

running my

y adorned,

Iplendois;

tendon qu

ads me of

chednears

d, the de-

with De

Dear Lasy

ly another

pect, and

d that the

from m

Demotion

of Phylick,

; but then

h hc, 15 10

hamongs

and from

MAS VETA

Marrist

dp of her

oth drym

her Pa-

(CDB)

A Spasia, the daughter of Hermotimus, after her Mother Phocensis dyed in labour, together with her child, being educated in penury, and want of a Parent, yet modefly and handsomely the often dreamed, that she saw one, who told her, that her fortune thould be fuch, that the thould be married to a gallant and honest Gentleman; it chanced to the Maid, that a swelling rose upon her very chin, most ugly to behold, which was a cause of much grief both to her father and her: whereupon her father brought her to a Physitian, who undertook to cure her, upon condition that he should give him three Staters, (which is worth feven shillings of our English coyn) for his pains; When the father faid, 'Twas more then ne had, the Physitian dismissed the young Maid uncured, who thereupon was most grievously tormented, so that she are nothing; that night, an opportune fleep feizing upon her, she had a Vision, wherein the heard these words. Be of good courage, and trouble not your felf with Physitians, but take a Rose of Venus, and beating it together into a falve, apply it to your swelling. Which when the awaked, the accordingly performed, and her fwelling was clean taken away, and Aspasia to far transcended all the Ladies of her time, in glorious beauty, vertuous life, and incomparable carriage, that Cyras King of the Persians, enamoured with her excellencies, first married her, and after his death Actanerxes took her to Wife. You may read the Story elegantly fet forth by Elianus de varia hiflo-

N the time of Plinius, the Mother of a certain Souldier who I served in the Prætory, dreamed, that she ought to lend to her fon the root of a wild Rofe-Tree, or Sweet-brier, which the had feen and observed in a Grove the day before by reason of its beauty, to drink in milk : This happened in Laretania, being the nearest part of Spain. And it came to passe, that this Souldier having been bitten with a mad dog, whereby he grew fo ill, that he began to fear the waters, and thew many symptoms of his infirmity; he received a Letter from his Mother, wherein she desired him to make use of the Medicine which was shewed her in his Vision; which he observing, and performing, became presently free from the mifery he was in; and not onely he, but any that afterwards upon like occasion, made use of that medicine. Plinius, lib. 25.

via, lib. 12. a principio.

Esculaping of Athens prescribed by Oracle to Plutarch an Athenian, and Domninus a Syrian, who bruised by I know not what chance, did spit blood, that they should be filled with Swinesflesh; but Plutarch, though by the Law of his Nation he was not forbidden Swines flesh, and therefore might have made use thereof according from fleep, Statue of Its the Temple new or lea with Swine E culapius preicribed l nimut, hav ctions of the he both the ported, if

have waxed

Certa per Ph Seaby fled to Xer. Town, which heads of Ly to whom the dream, to h least thou n from thee th is overwhe clined the K down with o carried his? Horles opens in the mean when they dryed, pnto jocles, and going neare at Magnefi Platarch, i. · Luca L'Mith the Idoll T

tud tutcutin

ving tid hi

had been pr

feethe God

of according to the prescription, utterly resused it, and awakened from sleep, stretching forth his arms in his bed, and beholding the Statue or Image of Asculapius (for he lay in the porch or entry of the Temple) he said, Why didst thou prescribe this cure to an Hebrew or Jewish Lord? for neither hadst thou bid him to be filled with Swines flesh. Which words when this man had spoken, Asculapius (a most sweet sound being uttered out of the Image) prescribed him another way of curing the disease. But Dominius, having followed the dream otherwise than the instructions of the Syrians, do lead unto, not the example of Plutarch, he both then and ever afterwards ate that slesh: and it is reported, if at any time it had ceased one day, the disease to have waxed worse, untill they were fullfilled. Suidas.

Certain Persian, Epixyes by name, a Noble Lord of the upper Phrygia, laid wait for Themistocles, going down unto the Sea by reason of businesse pertaining to Greece, after that he fled to Xerxes, Pifidians being long fince provided, who in the Town, which they call [Leontocephalon] (that word fignificth the heads of Lyons) that they might kill him, walking in the night. To whom they fay, the Mother Idea being fet before him by a dream, to have faid; O Themistocles, avoid thou the head of Lyons, least thou run into the Lyon. For this thing therefore I require from thee the hand-maid Mnesiptolema. From whence Themistocles being overwhelmed with fears, the goddesse, being worshipped, declined the Kings way, and being gone past that place, he now sate down with others in the night. But when one of the beasts which carried his Tent, had flidden into the River, the fervants of Themi-Stocles opened the arris hangings, being made wet, to dry them. In the mean time the Pifidians run to them with their Swords. But when they could not sufficiently see through those things that were dryed, unto the Moon; They thought they were the Tents of Themiflocles, and that they should find him resting within; when as now going nearer privily, they carried away the Arries, the servants being intentive, flew upon them, and quickly took them. So he having rid himself of the danger, in reverence of the goddesse, which had been presented before him, he built the Temple of Dyndimena at Magnesia, of whom he made his daughter Mnesiptolema a Nun. Plutarch, in Themistocles.

Lucullus going to Hellespont, built or fitted a Navy for the Mithridatick war. Being brought to Trom, he turned aside in the Idoll Temple of Venus. Being asleep in the night, he seemed to see the Goddesse standing by him; who said, Why sleepest thou, couragious Lion here, when num'rous Dogsish is next prefent there.

He arising, his friends being called unto him, put forth the dream,

12

134

MS,

es delivered

contrey, Po

ther Photonia

ocated in ce.

mely the or-

at and heath

ole upon he

much grid

ught her to

fhillings of

faid, Twa

rid uncures

that the an

her, the had

courses, an

s, and beating

ch when is

g was clear

adies of

ole cerriage

xcellencies

er to Will

aldier wo

lend to let

ch the two of its beau

the neares

aving been

e began no

rmity; it

red him to

is Vision.

free Ward

us, lib. 25

10 Mil.

nor what

Swines. was not

ule there

it being as yet night. Some of Troy were also present, who shewed him, that there were five of the King's Gallies with Oars at the Haven of the Achaians, thirteen which bent their course into Lemnos. Therefore he presently lets loose, and obtained these; he killed their Lievetenant or chief Commander. Isidore, &cc. Plutarch in Lucullus.

14. M. Arcorins, a Physician of Augustus Casar (when two Armies Of the Romans had stood in the fields of Philippi, here the Army of Ostavius and Anthony, there of Brutus and Cassius, and the next day they were to joyn battell) received a Dream from Minerva, that he should warn Ostavius labouring with a grievous difease, least by reason of health being against, he should not be present in the next battell. The which when Casar had heard, he commanded him to be brought in a horse-litter into the battell, in the which while (for the getting glory) he had watched and warded above his strength, he was treed of his disease, and was freed from the Souldiers of Brutus, thinking of his murther, and robbing his Camps, and striking thorow the empty Horse-Litter with Arrowes and Darts. Cicero, Book 3. Of Divining, in Augustus.

Seleucus was the son of Antiochus, who was one of Alexanders Captains. He had Luodice for Wise; who, that night in which the conceived Seleucus, it seemed to her, being at rest, that she lay together with Apollo, from whom she had received a ring ingraven with the shape of an Anchor, and that he was found in the bed, and to be kept with diligence. Laodice gave him unto Seleucus (being well taught concerning his birth) going with Alexander into Asia. It is added, that Seleucus, and those begotten by him, had their thigh marked with a natural Anchor.

16.

Then the Romans being once thut up in difficult places by V the Sammites, were greatly prefled upon; P. Decius, then Tribune of the Souldiers, he saw himself in his sleep, to lye between most thick wedges, dying with much glory. By which dream, the most valiant man, most thirsty after glory, yet not so much affrighted, as encouraged unto the defire of his promifed end, began to decline no kind of danger: and being admonished by friends, that he should fight the more warily, he opened unto them his dream and purpole. Then notwithstanding being (beyond thought) unburt he brought the army out fafe from the jaws of their enemies. But after three years passed between, the late truth was brought to fleep. For in the Latine War, himfelf being Confull, facrificed himself for the Common-wealth; and being brought into the middle of the enemies Armies, he dyed with fuch glory, that he stirred up his son unto the like desire of an hereditary death. These almost after this manner, are both written in the Annals of Rome, and related by Fully.

C. Gracebus

Cled in might delay death, by waster mort do of Aventuse flain. Citer. Gracebians.

Alpur which with many affrightned him, that the sot moved well delited to brought on turns, Book

Cornele fomewhite formers for the formers for

A Beholde nad music feemed to b feen the Dr taught by iflur, Ale

GReat Braces dreamed at the heap of wa and to have belonght cream, department of the stream of the s elected) w

BLB

and mockings of Evil Spirits. 229 Y. Gracehue faw the shape of his brother Tiberius (who was killed in the fedition of the field Law) in his fleep, faying. He might delay as much as he would, yet he must perish with the same death, by which he had died. Which also happened. For when after molt destructive Lawes published, he had possessed the Monne of Aventine with an armed multitude, by Lucius Opimius he was flain, Cicero in Book 1. Of Divination. Plutarch, in the life of the Gracchians. Alpurnia the Wife of Julius Cafar; faw in her rest, that night 18. which was the last he lived on the Earth, that he was flain with many wounds, laying in her bolome; and being exceedingly affrightned through the cruelty of the dream, ceased not to intreac him, that the next day he would abstain from the Court. But he not moved with a Womans dream, thought to do that, he earnestly defired to go to the Senate, in which the hands of Parricides were brought on him; where, by Brutus and Cassius he was slain. Valerius, Book 1. chap. 3. . Cornelius Sylla, not onely forefaw his death, but also wrote fomewhat of it: For in the twenty fecond Commentary of deeds done by him, two dayes before he deceased, he set to the last hand; and faith, the Chaldeans foretold him, That where he had famoully lived, he was to depart in the flowr of happinels. He telleth also, That his son, who had dyed a little before Metella, was feen in a dream to stand by him in an unufual garment, and to have prayed his father, that he would lay afide cares, and would go forward with him to his Mother Metella, there with her to live in rest. Plutarch. in Sylla. A Beholder of Playes, who standing in the place of beholding, 20. had mused in his sleep, that he was slain by a sword-player who feemed to be prefent; by and by he told the fitters by, that he had feen the Dream; so being killed by him with an Eel-spear, he raught by experience, the vain dream to be true, by a miserable iffue. Alexander, book 3. chap. 26. Reat Sfortias, the day before he departed from Orthona against Braccim, who befreged the City Aquila, in the year 1425, dreamed about the morning, That being overwhelmed with a deep heap of waters, was conveniant in the greatest danger of his life, and to have beheld a man in a Gyant-like shape very like to D.Chrittopher, of whom even with a great and often repeated voyce, he belought help in vain. But he being nothing warned by his dream, departing by Onthona, in the croffe paflage of the fmall River Aternus, (which at this day hath its name from the Town Pifcaria) while he brought help unto a Lad, his Armour-bearer being in jeopardy, his right hand being aretened forth, pitching in

MS.

t, who then the Oars at the Dele into Lon-

thele; bekil.

&cc. Plataris

two Armis

pp, here ne

you, and the in from case grievous de

d not be pre-

ard, he com

enell, in the

and warded and was freed

er, and no

Horfe-Litte ning, in A

of Alexander

ight in which

that the la

ting ingh

ound in the

a unto Sela-

th Alexande

ten by him

e places by

decine, their

to lye he

By which

, yet not he

admonished

pened unti

being (b

the MANER

e laterist

pfelt being

and being

dyed with

of an here

Written st

C. Gradia

BLB

the muddy Foord, his horse, although samous, sailed in his hinder legs, and so his armour weighing him down, he was drowned. Jouvius, in his Life.

22. Malpaga, an Archer, was not an unacceptable servant unto Ga. leatius Ssortias, Duke of Mediolum, among his houshold-servants. This man, the day before that Galeatius was killed, he saw in the night, at the time of rest, as if himself had been present at the thing, him being thrust thorow with wounds made, to be put together with his father in the same Cossin. That which afterwards he waking beheld to be done, Galeatius being dead, while a proper cossin was made for him. Which sight, the same Malpaga, before the Duke was killed, being through fear astonished, had told unto his Earls. Fulgosus, B. 1. ch. 5. Of Examples.

Ark Anthony Taurell, Earl of Guastella, when he warred in the Kingdom of Neapolis, in that War which Ferdinand the Elder, King of Arragon, waged with Renatus King of Andegavia, in the standing Camps, which he had in the Country of the Brutians; arising in the morning from his bed, he told those his Souldiers who had flood about him, that he faw in his fleep, that he was drowned in the water: and therefore decreed to abstain from fwimming, to which he had accustomed himself. But when at noon-day after fleep, being cloathed with a Souldiers warlike garment naked from above, he had come to walk to the neighbouring Lake, and faw fome of his Souldiers swimming, being unmindfull of his night-dream, and perchance the deftinies to drawing him, letting himself down with some others into the Lake to swim, according to the dream that he had feen, he was drowned, when as none of his Souldiers could bring him help. Fulgofus, book I. chap. 5.

Porace Perusine, servant of the Feasts or Junkers unto Alexander of Medices, Duke of the Florentines, a little before that he was killed by Lawrence of Medices, was vexed with a Feaver, from a vapour, as is meet to be believed, of black choler, he had a sight thrice in the night, in the which he beheld the Prince to be stabbed by Lawrence: Which images of things, drave the sickman, that he told it to Paschall the Prince's Physitian, to be related to the Prince. But Paschall, carefully doing duty, sound the Prince in that mind, that he said it was a stable of a dreaming sick man; admiring, why the whole house had conspired together for hatred of Lawrence: The Supply of Sabellicus, book 22. out of Jovius.

Baptista of Cardanum, studying at Papia, on a certain night, as foon as he arose, tryed to kindle a sparkle of fire. In the mean time he heareth this voyce, Go, my son, go to Rome. And he saw a great bright esse, like a bundel of burning chass. He being affrighted, his fire-light being laid aside, lay hid under the

When they deer, he so live to a jeft; if day tollow ing his Mo breathed o thefething two miles. This of his A

ted, until

Lyffes with o terpreters, laudable b laddenly to him desirin forth his har fuch a conju burth : for a then to him me caules o between his opon him, c prelent, pre him to take by his tather lenia. He hi deavoured legonar, wh the Island his father, whole top cen of hone Being inftr theground when as he

he begins to

bidden from

thought to

enother fon ceedingly,

trief, kille

expans 1

on the your bed, untill his chamber-fellows returned out of the University. When they returned, thinking him to be fick, they knock at the door, he openeth it. Straightway, to them enquiring the cause, he answereth, He thought his Mother to be dead, and told what he had feen and heard, and also wept. They turned the thing into a jeft; partly laughing at him, partly comforting him. The day tollowing, when as yet he had not received a melluge concerning his Mothers ficknesse, he was certified of her death, that the breathed out her foul in that very hour, wherein he had perceived these things. The Town of Cardanum is absent from Papia fourty two miles. Cardane, Of the variety of things, book 15. chap. 84. tells this of his Kinsman.

Lysses after his return into his Countrey, being affrighted with often contrary dreams, called together most skillfull Interpreters, telling, that a certain Image was feen by him, of a very laudable beauty, between the countenance of a man and a god, fuddenly to be fent forth out of the same place. The which, to him defiring to embrace with the greatest defire, and stretching forth his hand; it was answered unto him in a man's voyce, That fuch a conjoyning was wicked, because it was of the same bloud and birth: for thereby the one would destroy the others work. And then to him more eagerly, asking it, and defiring to learn perfectly the causes of that thing, a certain fign arising from a male, came between his fight, and that second power or jurifdiction of his cast upon him, to have disjoyned both. Which thing, all who were present, pronounced to be destructive with one mouth, warning him to take heed of the layings in wait of his ion. So, Telemachus by his fathers will, is banished into the fields which were in Cephalenia. He himself going apart into hidden and separated places, endeavoured to avoid the force of the Dreams. At the same time, Telegonu, whom being forung from uliffes, Cince had brought up at the Island Acaa, when he was of ripe years, going to search out his father, came to Ithaca, bearing in his hands a certin spear, whole top was armed with the bone of a Sea tortle, to wit, a token of honour of that Island, in which he had been brought up. Being instructed where his father uhises lived, by the keepers of the ground, being at his first passage more mistrusted, is forbidden, when as he more eagerly refifleth, he is on the contrary repulled, he begins to cry out, It was an unworthy act that he should be forbidden from the embracement of his father. So Telegonus being thought to come to bring force on the King, he is more sharply refifted, for it was not certainly known to any, that My Bes had also another fon. But the young man when he faw himfelf the more exceedingly, and by force, to be repulfed, being raifed up through grief, killeth, or being greatly wounded, weakeneth many of the keepers. Which things after they were known to Whises, he thinking the young man to have been fent by Telemachin, going forth of doors, eafts the Lance which he had wont to carry for his own de-

tence

MS,

in his hinder

rowned, Fa

vant note Go

killed, belen

in prefent at

ide, to be pu

which after

dead, while he fame atd.

r affonished

e watted is

erdinand the

of Anderston

y of the In-those his Son-

leep, that a

abitain tin

But when a

warlike gu

neighbourn

ing unmini

lo drawn

ake to win

wned, who gofus, back a

1910 Alexa

before the

h a France

noles, he had

Prince tok

eve the fick

to be related

id the Prince

fick may

r for hand

in night, si

it. In the chaff. He

under the

THE.

28.

fence, against Telegonus. After that, the young man escaped this stroak, he sends a notable dart against his present father. When ulyses fell down with the stroak, he gave thanks for his fortune, and confessed it was very well done by him, because being slain by the force of a strange man, he had freed Telemachus, a most dear son to him, from the wickednesse of parricide. And holding back the residue, he asketh the young man, who he was, and from what place risen, who durst kill ulyses the son of Laertes, samous for counsel and war? Telegonus then knowing it was his father, tearing his head with both his hands, uttered a most lamentable weeping, being exceedingly tormented for the death brought by him on his father. Dilys, in book 6.

Pindare, a Lyrick Poet, his age being now finished, seemed to see Persephone to stand by him in his sleep, and to complain, That she onely of all the gods was not adorned with his verses. But when he had come unto her, he should also make an hymn on her. Indeed, a little after, and even before the tenth day from that dream, he finished the duties of life. There was at Thebes a certain old woman, joyned to Pindare by kin, and very much exercised in singing forth many of his songs. Pindare shewing himself to her at the time of rest, sung a song on Persephone. She being presently awakened, wrote down all things which she had heard Pindare singing, through a vision in her sleep. Truly in that song, amongst other streames of the hell-goddes, is Chrysenius, to wit, from the golden rains; which thing, it is sufficiently manifest, to have served for the snatching away of Proserpina. Pausanias, in his Exoticks.

Nto Phayll King of the Phocians, after the Temple of Delphos Ipoyled, he featce as yet having come to his command, such a thew by a dream, was fet before him. Among the things offered to Apollo, there was a very old image of brass, of a man, whose flesh being consumed, his bones alone were left. They of Delphos said, it was dedicated by Hippocrates the Physician. Phayll seemed to see himself made like to this. And a few dayes after, pining away with leanness, he sulfilled the issue of the dream. Pausanian, in his Photicks.

A Little before the destruction of Messena, in the twenty sirst year of the War, Aristodemus, King of the Messenians, seemed at the time of test, to see, when as now arms being taken up, he was to go forth to battle, the intrails of facrifices being placed on a table, his daughter (whom six years before being sacrificed for the safety of his Country, he had slain with his own hands) standing by him in a black or mourning garment, and her breast being naked, shewing her wounds: and then the intrails being removed from the table, the weapons being withdrawn, her self to be endowed with that golden crown and white garments. He thereford thought this dream to betoken death unto him, because the Messe-nism lift up genzent. n.r. ne faw h Tomb he br

A right he that in the e him, when between, affect being of ter, a Greek dreams, he against his hand of Cal lank 6. Enn

A Leibia draight very much take him ou as others nas him. He we some, and to ment of his his Life.

Hat wa

avay. The kepr at home of weapons used to be a bear. Yer

Boar of hug pas, with of humbly bel ion wrefled him, indee both, but to diligently b lan that he

BLB

nians lift up the Nobles being crowned, and covered with a white garment. And without delay, when by the devoting of his daughter, he saw he could nothing profit his Country, at his daughter's Tomb he brought death on himself. Plutarch. in Cleomenes.

A Lexander King of Macedonia, first knew by a dream, that the right hand of Cassander would prove mortal to him, before that in the end he felt it. For he thought himself to be killed by him, when as he had never seen him. At then, sometime coming between, after that he had come into view, the image of his night-fear being disclosed, as soon as he knew it to be the son of Antipater, a Greek verse being added, which raiseth up the truth of the dreams, he beat back the suspicion of poysoning now prepared against his head; whereby it is reported he was slain with the hand of Cassander. Valerius Maximus, book 1, chap. 7. Sabellicus, book 6. Ennead. 4.

A Leibiades taking a sleep, thought himself in his sleep to be covered with the cloak of his Concubine. The truth whereof straightway followed. For Critias, when he saw Alcibiades very much to prevail in savour and authority, endeavoured to take him out of the midst of them. Therefore he sent Tisimen (or as others name him, Susametres) and Bagous, that they might kill him. He when he was with his Leamond, being killed in her bosome, and was cast away unburied, was covered with the garment of his Concubine. Justine, book 5. Plutarch. & Probus, in his Life.

Hat was an effectual Image of rest, which brake the courage of King Crafin, first with the greatest fear, and then also with grief. For of his two fons, he thought that Atys the more excelling both in great nimblenes, and endowments of body, and ordained for the succession of the Empire, was taken away from him by the fword. Therefore whatfoever did belong to avoid the bitterneffe of a denounced flaughter, the father's care in no part cealed to turn away. The young man was wont to be fent to wage Wars; he was kept at home. He had an Armory filled with plenty of all kinds of weapons; that also he commanded to be removed. His Earls used to be girded with the sword; they were forbidden to come near. Yet necessity made way for mourning. For when a wild Boar of huge bigness wasted the tilled places of the Mountain Olympus, with often destruction of the Country-people; and help was humbly belought of the King against the unaccustomed evill, the fon wrested by force from his father, that he might be sent to slay him, indeed to much the easier, because the cruelty not of the tooth, but of the fword, was laid up in fear. But while all were diligently bent on a sharp endeavour of killing the swine, a stubborn chance of a hovering force, turned the launce fent from Advastus, that he might smite the wild beast, out of the right way into Hh him:

30.

31.

32.

escaped this

her, When

tortune and

flain by the It dear loo to back the re-

from what

tamous his

ther, tearing

de weeping

y him on his

f, seemed w

complain,

s vertes. But symn on her,

n that dream

certain el

reifed in ing

to her at the

ently awats

dare finging

nongst other

n the golds

ferved to e of Delple

mand, for

hings offered

natt, whole

y of Delete

syll feemel

tter, pina, Paufania,

ity first yes

leemed a

up, he was

laced of I

iced for the

s) francing

A being na

e removed

if to be co-

the Ablic

icks.

234 An History of Dreams, Visions, him; and indeed would have that right-hand especially aspersed with the fault of a wicked murder, unto whom the desence of the son was committed by the father. Valer. Maximus, book 1. chap. 7. G Herodoius, book 1.

Polycratis, daughter of a Tyrant, of the Samians, the seemed to see at the time of rest, her tather to be on high in the ayr; who should indeed be washed by Jupiter, but, anointed by the Sun. She being affrighted with this vision, warned her father, that he should not go to Orates the Governour of Cambyses at Sardis. But he obeying not the saying, was fashed to a crosse by Orates. Herodotus, back 1.

34. Unto Hipparchus the son of Pisistratus, was presented in his sleep, the image of a tall man pronouncing these verses;

Τλήθι, λέων, άτλημα παθών τετλήση Θυμώ, Ουδείς ανθρώπων άδικων τίσιν με ποτίσς.

Bear (Lyon) things unsufferable, suffer with bearing mind: There is no wicked man, to whom bee'l not repay in kind.

In the morning he would refer these words to the Interpreters of dreams. But straightway the Vision being despised, he neglected it, and went away into the solemn fight, where, by Aristogiton, and Harmodius, Gephyreans, he was killed. Herodotus, book 5.

Simon of Athens, when as he moved an expedition against the Persians, his Navy being now ready, he had such a dream. An angry Bitch seemed to bark at him, and to utter thereupon a voyce mixed of a man's voyce, and a dog's barking, in these words;

Be gone, thou art to be a friend To me, and to my whelpish kind.

35.

Asyphilus Posidoniates therefore, a divining man, and familiar friend of Simon, affirmed death to be foretold him, using this argument: The dog is an enemy to him whom he barks at: but to an enemy none is dear, or a friend, but when he dyeth. Moreover, the mixed voyce, sheweth the Mede an enemy, whose Armies are mixt of Greeks and Barbarians. The end proved the dream to have been true: for not much time after Simon dyed of a disease in the siege of Citium. Plutarch, in his Life.

Vhen

Tol

He faid to Country of Socrates, the good frience tupe. And perished,

A forth to be thrust to be thrust the told it in it fell out, to brought in the same mand forthwisen off, by the ferable man place, and

ng along, ki

erins Maxin

I alian Cafa feemed to right ham in his bed, a dowes being and the Me afleep, to u hed that fin fonc. Out unto Cefars and enlargit to have flide weep. But any means it to might a still the sti or might a dremner d all of the So ter his beau and mockings of Evil Spirits.

235

When as a certain one had feemed to repeat a verse of Ho- 36.

"Huate a restato point ceiconor inoso.

Thou shalt indeed on the third day

To Phthia come, full fraught with clods of clay.

He said to Aschilles. I shall dye on the third day. Phthia was the Country of Achilles. And his friends endeavoured to perswade Socrates, that he should flee into Thessaly, because there he had good friends. But he drew offer, from [offer,] that is, to kill or corrupt. And the third day after, Hemlock being drunk in prison, he perished. Laertius, in his Life.

A Tterius Rusus, a Roman Knight, when a Sword-play was set forth by the Syracusans, he saw himself in the time of sleep, to be thrust thorow by the hand of Retiarius. And the next day he told it in the place of beholding unto the sitters by. Afterwards it sell out, that in the next place from the Knight, Retiarius was brought in by the Sword-player. Whose face, when he had seen the same man said, he thought he should be slain by that Retiarius, and forthwith he would depart thence. They, his fear being shaken off, by their speech, brought the cause of destruction to the miserable man. For the Sword-player being compelled into that place, and cast down while the endeavours to strike him lying along, kills Atterius being thrust thorow with his Sword. Valerius Maximus, in the first Book, chap. 7.

ulius Cafar, not much before he died, in his sleep sometimes he feemed to himself to fly above the Clouds, sometimes to joyn his I right hand to Jupiter. Moreover in the same night, when he lay in his bed, all the dores of his Chamber, and likewise the Windowes being fet open, he was affrighted both with a noise and light, and the Moon shining bright, he marketh Calphurma being fast afleep, to utter dark words, and undistinct fighings. She imagined that the lamented him whom the held thrust thorow, in her bosome. Others deny that fight to have been set before her. But when as a Pinnacle had been (by the decree of the Senate) adjoyned unto Cafars house, as Livy is Audior, as it were for an Ornament, and enlarging it, Calpburnia having imagined (at the time of rest that to have flidden down) the feemed to her felf therefore to mourn and weep. But when light had approached, the asked Cafar, if by any means it might be brought to passe, that he might not go forth, but might adjourn the Senate unto another time. But if he did elleemher dreams but as a lock of Wool, yet he should ask Counfell of the Southlayers, and Sacrifices, concerning things hanging over his head; Whence there was some suspition and fear fer be37.

20

Hh 2

fore

a difeate in

ally alpered eforce of the DOR 1. 1949.7.

to feemed to the ayr; who

the Son, See

hat he should But he obes

. Herodotu

ented to his

veries;

na;

respecters 0

he negleda

ANGOTON

against the dream. An

WOLDS

nd familian

fing this ar-

at: but to

th. More

hole Armin

dream to 100k 5.

When

fore him also, as it seemeth: For he took notice of no superstition before the woman was grieved or vexed for that thing which she then saw. But assoon as the Soothsayers told him, satisfaction could not be made, many sacrifices being now slain, he determined, Anthony being sent, to dismisse the Senate. In the mean time Decius Brutus, surnamed Albine, whom Cesar, for the trust which he had to him, had written amongst his second heirs; seeing he was a companion of the conspiracy of the other; Brutus and Cassius searing lest if Casar should passe away that day, the matter would have been told abroad, he mocked the Soothsayers, and reproved Casar; and being taken by the hand, led him forth. And so that day, in the Court, being thrust thorow, with many wounds he was wretchedly slain. Plutareb.

Y Esar being flain, the people diligently sought after the con-39. spirators being hidden. Helius Cinna the Poet, one of Cafars friends, had the night before, a fearfull dream. It feemed to him that he was invited by Cafar to Supper; but when he refused, he was led by the hand against his will, and strugling. This man, hearing the body of Cafar to be burnt in the Market-place, although he had his Vision mistrusted, and was also held with a Feaver, came for the honours sake of him into the Market-place. Assoon as he was feen one of the common people told his name to another which asked him, he to another: firaitway it spread through all, that this man was one of Cafars fmiters. For there was among the Conspiratours, another of his surname, Cornelius Cinna: whom because they thought this was he, by and by, a violent force being made, they in the very market-place, tore him in pieces. Plutarch in Cafar & Brutus.

New (Provinces a little after falling off from him) was affrightned with evident fignes of Dreams, and fignifications of things to come, and all things both old and new, he never wonting to dream before. At length his mother being killed, he faw at the time of rest, a Ship, the stern by violence wrested from him governing it, and to be drawn by Offavia his wife into the most narrow dark places. And by and by to be filled up with a multitude of winged Ants, sometimes to setch a circuit from the Images of Nations dedicated to the Theatre or view of Pompey, and to be driven away in their progresse: an ambling Nag, in which he very greatly delighted, the latter part of his body transfigured into the form of an Ape, and onely his head being whole, to utter forth shrill neighings. Suetonius.

Alba the Emperour, a little before his death, had fet apart out of his Treasure, a Jewell set forth with Pearls and pretious stones, to beautify his Tusculane-Fortuna. That on a sudden as more worthy of a samouser place, he dedicated unto Venus of or in the Capitoll. But the next night he saw Fortune complain in his fleep threaten things v in the dr fore, wi tulanum Altar, a incenfe in

D plate the field by a Country was place and the first with blate prefently

Suctioning,

A Nihem
thoro
thoro ferring fo
a Sword
ther Geta
firep, ner
when ast

Dia

while she feats the feats, or chains, or cha but, this

telt, all

folute re

his

BLB

his fleep, of the Jewell being taken away: and in good carnest to threaten, that she would fnatch away himself, and also those things which he had given. The Emperour being affrighted in the dream, most early in the morning, those being sent before, who should make ready the Divine thing, ran into Tustulanum: and he found nothing besides warm embers on the Altar, and an old man clad in black beside it, holding Frankincense in a Glasse dish, and unmixt Wine in an earthen cup. Suetonius.

Domitian dreamed that Alinerva departed out of the holy place, denying that the could defend him further, because the had been disarmed by Jupiter. The same man dreamed, that a Countrey-man came to him with a Sword, and Minerva, who was placed in his Chamber, to have cast away her weapons, and the same to go down out of a Chariot, which was drawn with black Horses, into a great gaping of the Earth. He was presently slain by his layers in wait. Xiphiline, in his life.

A Nihony Caracalla, Emperour, a little before that he was thrust thorow by Martial, Tribune of the Souldiers, and prepared a setting forward out of Antioch, his father Severus stood by him with a Sword in his sleep; and sauth, Even as thou hast slain thy brother Getas, so will I kill thee. Anthony therefore awaking out of sleep, never doubted the end of his cruelty, and life to be at hand when as before also the Diviners had foretold the like things. Dion. Nycam.

Ionyfius of Syracufa, as yet containing himself within a private habit, a certain woman Hymeraa, of no obscure stock; while the took rest, in her opinion climbed up to Heaven, and there the feats of all the gods being viewed, the takes notice of a mighty man, of a yellow colour, a freckled face, bound with Iron chains, covered underneath with the Throne and feet of Jupiter. And the young man being asked what Captain, the favour of beholding heaven had used, who he was? She heard that he was a curfed destiny unto Sicily and Italy, and that being loosed from bonds he was to be a destruction unto many Cities. The which dream the the day after by speech divulged. And then, after that fortune, an enemy to the liberty of the Syracufans, and hatefull to the lives of guiltleffe ones, cast Dionysim, being freed from his heavenly custody, as it were a certain Thunderbolt, into idlenesse and reft, assoon as Hymerea beheld him entring the walls among a diffolute rout, for the honouring and beholding of him, the called our, this is he whom the had feen in her fleep. That thing being known, made the Tyrant carefull to take the woman out of the way. Val. book 1. chap. 7.

42.

43.

44.

When

had fet aper rls and preion a fudde and Fermi of complain in his

DAS,

no superstition

ang which the

m, fatisfaction

he determined

ean time Day-

ruft which be

feeing he was

us and Caffur matter would

and reprove

And to the

wounds he was

after the con-

one of Celan

seemed to him

he refused, to

place, although

rith a Feavo

place, Affor

pame to ano

pread through

TE Was a mon

Cinna: Wells

in pieces. Pi

) was affright

stions of thanh

F WORLING IN

e law at the

rom him go.

the most nur

ha multitud

he langes of

and to be dri

hich he very

ured into the

er forth fini

Hen Cicero followed Julim Cafar into the Capitoll, and told him, the last night Jupiter was seen by him, who with a Golden chain had let down a little boy of a wonderfull towardnesse from Heaven, unto the Gate of the Capitoll, unto whom he had atterwards given a whip in his hand: Obsavim being then beheld whom Cafar had brought into the Capitoll for paying a vows sake, he knew that to be him whom he had seen in his sleep: His triumphs and Son, being truly a scourge to the too much proud Nobilty of Rome, made Cicero his dream certain. Fulgosus, book 1.chap. 5.

26. Catulus, the Capitoll being dedicated, at the time of his rest, he saw Jupiter to have chosen one out of many children cloaned in Purple robes, to whom he had given the Roman ensigns to be carried in his hand, and the night following, when sleeping, he would drive away that very child out of Jupiters bosome, Jupiter said, that he should not remove the child, because he kept him for the safeguard of the Roman Commonwealth. On the morning sollowing, he by chance lighting on Osavim, by his shape and garment knew, that that was he, whom he had seen at the time of sleep. Fulgosus, book 1. chap. 5. & Xiphilin.

Sheep shewed unto Vespasian the father, his own Royall office; and of his sons. For when he was as yet a private man in Achaia with Nero, he saw ittoldhim (at his rest) by an unknown person, that his happinesse shall begin when a tooth should be raken away from Nero. Therefore being awakened, he on whom he first happened, was a Physician, who shewed him a tooth that he had pulled out of Nero. Therefore not much after the death of Nero tollowed, likewise of Galba, and after them the discords of Otho and Vitellas, yielded the first beginnings and strength to Vespasian for rule. Fulgosas, book in chap. 5. Moreover Nero himself saw (at test) Jupiters Charlot to be sent into the house of Vespasian: which words when they wanted interpreting, Josephus the Jew said they did betoken the Roman Empire to Vespasian. Xiphiline in Vespasian.

Julian being chosen Emperour by the Souldiers in France against is will, said to some of his more dear friends; On that night which had gone before the day of his being declared Emperour, a certain likenesse (was seen by him) of some Genius or Paynim, which said these words unto him in a chiding manner: Ere while (O Julian) I attend at the porch of thy house, hiddenly much delighting to increase thy dignity, but as often as being repulsed, I have departed: and (the opinion of many agreeing) neither now indeed am I received, I will go cast down and sorrowfull; yet that I will keep in remembrance in my heart, that I will dwell no longer with thee. Cuspinian.

Neptune

Ving ling

actince

lolopher

tayeiteh

complain

led the C

miliarth

thelewor

to him,

flow on I

fishes. 1

Litea

night-sha

the time

interpret

inguined i

and full o

Herodota.

THe N

Lhimi

esterprete

tain iffue,

the Greena

Allyages

of his being

Mandanes

to have ov

man of th

Over into

a mean fo to be put

throught

have incr

dominion

through p appointed

book I. ch

having

BLB

48.

Teptune seemed unto Stipo the Philosopher in his sleep, to be angry: because he had not offered [Hecatombe] that is, the sacrifice of an hundred beafts, as the custome was. But the Philosopher being nothing disturbed at this sight, answered: What sayes thou, Neptune? Dost thou so come hither as a boy with thy complaint, because money being mutually taken, I have not silled the City with a savour? But according to the bignesse of a familiar thing, I have sacrificed unto thee some very small sishes. As these words Neptune smiling, he seemed, his right hand being plucked to him, to have said unto him: For thy great savour, I will bestow on the City of the Megarians, plenty of [Apues] or very small sishes. The which also they deliver to have happened.

Nto Hippias the son of Pisistratus, while being a banished man he ambitiously seeks after Kingly Authority, at Maratho, a night-shape of his mother, with whom he seemed to copulate, at the time of rest, was brought before him. For which thing the interpreters answered him, that Authority Royall was largely signified unto him, and he being put in mind thereof by his dream, and full of hope, not long after enjoyed the dominion of Athens. Herodotus, book 6.

The Mother of Dionysius of Syracusa, when she had conceived him in her womb, she seemed to bring forth a Satyr; and an Interpreter of wonders; being consulted with, she knew with a certain issue, that he was to be the most famous and most mighty of the Grecian bloud. Valerius, book 1. shap. 7.

Assigns Cyrus his grandsather by the Mother side, the birth of Cyrus having respect unto the Empire of all upper Asia, two dreams of his being fore-messengers of it, endeavoured in vain to shake off Mandanes his daughter, because he had seen in his sleep, her urine to have overslowed all the Nations of Asia, not to a most excelling man of the Medes, less the glory of the Kingdom should be passed over into that samily, but by assigning her unto Cambyses, a man of a mean fortune of the Persians, and by commanding her son Cyrus to be put out; because he (times being quiet) likewise had thought, through the off-spring of Mandanes, the vine sprung forth would have increased so far, untill it would over-shadow all parts of his dominion: but truly he was disappointed, by endeavouring, through man's counsels, to hinder the happinesse of his Nephew, appointed unto him by the judgment of the heaven-lies, Valering, book 1. chap. 7. Herodotus, book. 1.

50.

12/19

1

Bus transport the state at their emissions in larrow a citizen They

Neptati

MS.

itoll, and toli

who with a

towardness

whom he had

then beheld

ga vows laiz,

tep: His m.

proud Non-

book Lobup. s.

time of his

iman enligh

nen Ueeping

solome, Jup

e kept him in

e morning tol-

ape and es-

e time of the

oyall office

vate man i

an unknown

boold be to

ooth that k

death of Mi

cords of Om

to Verpent

nelf faw (s

Gan: which

w faid the

me in Pope

rance agains

that night

Emperos

or Paymin

Ere will

y much de repulied, l neither non ll; yet the

till no loo

240

54.

They report, That Cyrus, King of the Affyrians, dreamed, the eldest of Prince or Duke Hystaspes his sons, with two wings to overshadow, with the one, Asia; with the other, Europe. Therefore after his son Cambyses, Darius the eldest son of Hystaspes having obtained the Kingdoms, subdued Europe and Asia. Herodotus, book 1. & Justin.

Ithridates the sonne of Ariobarzanes was a companion to Demetrius fon of Antiogonus, and his equal, and had Antigonus in reverence, a man evill neither in deed, nor in the opinion of others. An unlucky suspition happened to Antigonus, concerning him by reason of a vain dream. For (at his rest) it had seemed to him, to have set a wide field with branches of gold, from thence first grew golden corn. A little after, he, when he had returned thither, found nothing but stubble; and when he was very greatly grieved, he heard the voyce of a certain one, who faid, Mithridates, the golden corn being mowed down, went away into the Euxine Sea. He being much troubled, opened that fight to his fon, being first brought to an oath of filence: and that thing also, that he determined by any means to kill Mithridates. Demetrius (this thing being known) was grievous forrowfull, and when as he being a youth, according to his manner, being at leifure, had come to him, not daring for the tye of the oath, to warn him by words, drew him apart by degrees from friends; and when they were alone, his Spear being turned upfide down, he wrote, he beholding him, Flee Mithridates: and he, the matter being understood, fled away by night into Cappadocia. But destiny proved the foolish Dream of Antigonus to be true, by and by: for Mitbridates possessed a large and good Country, and was the author of the Kingdom of Pontus, which the Romans under about the eighth King, overthrew. Plutarch. in Demetrius.

Apollo, the seemed to be co-mingled with a Dragon, and the moneths for bringing forth being fulfilled, the brought forth. Morcover, before the brought forth, the dreamed, that her bowels were carried on high into Heaven, and were powred forth into the whole World. The same night, Ostavim saw in his sleep, that he sprang out of his mother's womb. When the Insant was now born, Nigidim Figulus, a Senatour, presently foretold unto the Father, the highest royall authority unto his son. Xiphilin. O Suction, in Augustus.

Ctavius, when he led an Army thorow Thracia, and had asked counsel of the Oracle of Bacchus concerning his son Augustus; the night following he presently seemed to see his son more sumptuous than in a mortal shape, with a thunder-bolt and Scepter, and

he

out with

womenes

pitol, ke

allentg

ther abou

iom the f

being in manded t

god, asi

Commo

him, not

of whom

Las othery

purple to them, or

had brou

Marcus (

by chance

friends:

golden ch

to have do

being leen

prought to

menme o

T is ag

Lincali

contpitaci

his fons w

a certain be the Palatic

Claudine ar

the thing

with the

Als laft d

to the m

olvefpaji

Aug

the left p

BLB BADISCHE LANDESBIBLIOTHEK

the spoyls of Jupiter the most excellent great, and a chariot covered over with a fhining crown of Bay, twelve horfes of an exceeding whiteness drawing it. Q. Catulus, after the dedication of the Capitol, for two nights together dreamed; in the first, The most excellent great Jupiter, many boyes in robes of purple playing together about the Al ar, separated one, and to have laid into his bofom the finge of the Common-wealth which he carried in his hand; and in the night following, to have observed, that he, the same child being in the lap or bosome of Jupiter Capitolinus, when he had commanded to be withdrawn, was forbidden by the warning of the god, as though he should be brought up for the safeguard of the Common-wealth. And the next day beholding Augustus meeting him, not without admiration, he faid, he was most like to the Lad of whom he had dreamed. Some unfold the first dream of Catulus otherwife, as though Jupiter, many boyes together cloathed in purple robes, requiring a defender from him, had thewn one among them, unto whom they should bring back all their defires, and had brought his kiss untouched with his fingers, unto his mouth. Marcus Cicero having followed C. Julius Cafar into the Capitol, he by chance told the dream of the foregoing night unto his familiar friends: a boy of a free countenance, let down from heaven by a golden chain, to have stood at the doors of the Capitol, and Jupiter to have delivered unto him a whip. And then suddenly Augustus being feen, whom as yet unknown to most, his Uncle Cafar had brought to facrifice, he affirmed him to be he, whose likenesse at the time of sleep was presented before him. Suetonius.

It is agreed amongst all, That Vespasian the Emperour was so sure alwayes of the off-spring of him and his, that after daily conspiracies against him, he dared to assirt to the Senate, Either his sons were to succeed him, or none. It is said also, that he saw a certain ballance (at ress) placed in the middle part of the Porch of the Palatine-house, with an equall beam, when as in the one scale, Claudina and Nero stood; in the other he and his sons. Neither did the thing deceive, when as both commanded so many years, and with the like space of time. They say, Nero, in his sleep, was in his last dayes put in mind, that he should bring forth the Chariot to the most excellent great Jupiter out of the Vestry, into the house of Vespasian, and into the Gircle.

Antioch of Syria, in his sleep, a fire to fall from Heaven on the left part to his neck or throat, straightway to creep on the right; with which fire, be seemed to himself to be neither fore atraid, nor hurt. Dion. of Nices, & Xiphiline in Adrian.

in an early parties, when so was late in the night, and he 57.

58.

A E

Alexander

camed, the

NO WINEI TO

her, Emore.

of Happ

14. Hous-

companion

al, and his

BOT IN the

Antiques

at his refi

with bran-

A little at-

out flubble;

voyce of a

CIRC MOVICE

ch troubles

ath of filent

as to kill 16

erierous in-

his manner

e the of the

legrees trea

and he, the

paderis, Bo

crue, by sai

y, and me

SERVED BOOK

E Temple o

on, and the

the brough

ed, that he

owred forth

in his fleet

id unto the

dhadasia

are fump cepter, and

pis.

60.

61.

Lexander, while he affaulteth the City of Tire for 7. moneths. with Bullwarks, Engines, and two hundred oar-gallies on the Sea fide, faw Hercules, at his rest, stretching out his hand to him from the wall, and inviting him. Apollo feemed to fay to many of the Tycians in the dreams, that they should passe over unto Alexander, for neither should those things which should be done in the City be effected by them. But they as traytors of the wickedness found out, bound the Image of Apollo with chains, and fastned him to the foot of a pillar with nails, calling him a favourer of Alexander. Another shape was set before Alexander in the night. A Satyre was offered to him. The which when he endeavoured quickly to take, it withdrew it felf; at length, after many intreaties and runnings about of his, it came into his hand. The diviner, the name being divided afunder, not abfurdly answered, Sa-Turos, Tyre shall be thine, because [Sa] with the Greeks, fignifieth thine. They shew a spring, at which next after sleep, he saw the Satyre. Plutarch. Alexander.

Umenes, when he thought Neoptolemus and Crater to move against whim, and provided to move by night; by and by being overcharged with fleep, a wonderful Vision was offered to him. He seemed to see two Alexanders at a battle joyned between themfelves, and both to lead all the wings : hence, to the one came Minerva; to the other Ceres, for help. A sharp conflict being begun, that being scattered for whom Minerva stood, Ceres, ears of corn being divided afunder, weaved a crown for the Conquerour. This being seen, he conjectured it was the second to him, who for a very good field, and at that time having a famous ear of Corn in the knop of a Rose, did fight. For it was full of fown feed, and peafe yielded a bright thew, the fields having long grass in great plenty. He was now more raised up; after that he understood Minerva and Alexander to be a fign of battle to the enemies. He therefore gave also Ceres and Alexander a fign to his Souldiers, that they should redeem their head and weapons with the Crown made of ears of Corn. A battel being joyned, he flew Neoptolemus and Crater. Plutarch. in Eumenes.

Imoleon, chief Commander of the Corinthians, a Navy being prepared for help of the Sicilians, against Dionysius the Tyrant, and all things being delivered or supplyed, which an Army had need of, the Priests of Proserpina seemed to see Ceres and Proserpina to go far from home, adorning themselves, and with Timoleon, saying, They were to sayl into Sicily. Wherefore they provided an holy Galley with oars of Corinth, named Drabus. He had seven Corinthian ships, The Leucadians afforded the tenth, when he looseth from these parts; when it was late in the night, and he was carried with a prosperous wind, on a sudden, the Heaven seemed

ed to him

powred fo

was propi

checiall

ed this l

goddefic

with tois

her for a

confirme

A Sthe I testabl

notonely

man Emp

purpole,

ble than whole w

ftraightw

looking b

with a fti

with und

great noy!

etiacis.

MET WAS A

(am he)

COLUMN

A Manda

Phiarax

cine, Eu

og by hip

had been

daw olds

have dan

Maydoni Maydoni

diwith 200

et Kernes

ehad p chedit

BLB BADISCHE LANDESBIBLIOTHEK

and mackings of Evil Spirits.

243

ed to him to be cleft, and a plentiful and clear flame to have been powred forth upon the thip. From thence a Torch litted up, that was proper to the mysticall or hidden things, and accompanying and holding the same course, what part of traly the Governours most especially defired, it was brought into that. The Prophets affirmed this shew to agree with the Dreams of the Priests, and that the goddesses were at hand in this voyage, and to shine before them with this shining brightnesse. For Storly was holy to Proserpina, for there they sable the was allured, and that this Island was given her for a nuprial gift. And truly after this manner was the Navy confirmed. Platarch, in Timoleon.

A Sthe Dream of Hannibal, Captain of the Carthaginians, was derestable to the Roman bloud; fo, of a certain foretelling whose not onely wakings, but also very sleep was ominous unto the Roman Empire. For he drew forth an Image agreceble to his purpose, and desires; and he thought a young man more noble than in a mortal shape, to be sent unto him from Jupiter. By whole warning, ar first, his eyes following his steps into no part, straightway a ready will of keeping an humane wit being seared, looking behind him, he perceiveth a Serpent of a huge greatneffe, with a stirred force, treading every thing whatfoever he had mee with under feet: and after him, showres breaking forth with a great noyle of heaven, and the light rolled up within very obscure darknels. And then being aftonithed, he asked, What that Monfter was, what it might betoken? This is a Captain; thou feelt (laith he) the defolation of Italy; therefore be filent, and leave other things unto filent destinies. Valer. Max. in book. 1. chap.7.

A Mandatus is a servant from Mardonius unto the Oracle of Amphiaraus, to enquire about those things which they should execute. But he thought, in his sleep, a servant of the god was standing by him, at first indeed to drive him back by word, as if the god had been absent: but straightway, as lesse obeying, to thrust him also with his hand. Last of all, to him stubbernily abiding, to have dashed a great stone in his head. Tavia y we will work a require with a stone, but these things were mis sounds of things to come. For Mardonius was overcome at Platea in a great battel, and being smitten with a stone, was slain. Calius, book 19. chap. 15: out of Plutarch.

Erwes, the son of Darius, King of the Persians, was about to bring war on the Greeks; Artabanus son of Hystaspes, the Uncle of Xerxes, exceedingly withstood it. Xerxes although fretting, yet he had purposed to obey Artabanus. But the destinies urging him, he had the same dream twice. He saw a man in a noble likenesse, chiding him, because he descreed to bring War on Greece. The thing being talked of with Artabanus, he constrained Artabanus cleathed with the King's garments, to take a sleep in the King's

1 i 2

62.

63.

641

BLB

7.moneths

allets on the

this hand to o lay toma-

e over more

d be done in the wickeland fashed

favourer of in the night, ndeavoured

nany intrea-

The divi-

wered, Sa-

ks, fignifieth

, the law the

moveagant

being over-

to him. H

ween them-

ne came Mi-

affict being

lood, Certi

for the Con-

e fecond to

r it was mil

ields having

3 after that

settle to the

a fign to his

CAROUS WILL

sed, he flew

Navybeing the Tyrant, Army but

d Profespion

moleon, ir

provided in 8. He had

th, when he

he, and he

caven feem-

Throne. The same resemblance was also presented before the eyes of Artabanus: Therefore he incenfed Xerxes unto the Warr of Greece, with no lefs diligence than before he had withstood: indeed the evil face of Xerxes to urging it, that the most proud King might pay the punishments of his rathness and pride. The same Xerxes seemed to himself to be crowned with an Olive-grass, with the boughs of which Olive the whole Earth was overwhelmed, and presently the Crown, tyed fast about his head, vanished: This dream was more famous and fure than the former. Xerxes had affrighted the world with Warlike preparation, and new feemed to triumph over Greece, Athens being taken, when as he was by the diligence of Themistocles broken, he was forced by a shamefull flight to thist for his life. Herodotus, buok 7.

He Spartans, Callicratidas being Captain, were to fight at Ar-I ginusa in a Sea-battell with the Athenians, the diviners on both fi es disswading them. For the head of a facrificed beast lying on the shore, dispersed the Lacedemonians, being drawn through the rage of a wave; the Soothfayers shewed, all these things betokened that the Pretor of the Navy was to perish in that combat. Which thing being heard, they fay Callicratidas answered, he should withdraw nothing from the Spartane worthinesle, if by fighting he should fail. But unto Thrafibulus the Athenian, who being then Pretor, led the Navy, and to whom that day, the top of Royall Authority had come by lor, by night this dream appeared. It feemed to him, together with fix other Prætors, to act the Tragedy of Euripides, whose title is inscribed, [Phænisius] in the common Theatre. But it seemed his adversaries acting the Tragedy, whose name is [Supplices], the Cadmean Victory to have happened to them, and all to have perified, by imitating the Captains, who had pitched their Tents for the affaulting of Thebes. Ti ele things being heard, a Prophet being called to interpret, they fo expounded it, that leven Captains were to fall in that battell. But the holy things otherwise openly promising Victory, he balle the Caprains, that it may be shewed unto their companions alone concerning every ones death, but that they divulge a Victory (betokened by those very holy things) throughout the whole Army. A barrell being joyned, Calieratidas, some Ships of the Enemies being first overcharged, dyed; the conquest remained in the power of the Athenians, 25. Ships being loft, 77. of the Enemies funk. fought on both fides, with little leffe then four hundred Ships, and that battel is mentioned to be the greatest of all, which indeed Greeks with Greeks ever fought. Diodore, in Book 13.

Nto Pyrrhu King of the Epirots belieging Sparta, fuch a dream 66. was offered. All Lacedemon being stricken with a Thunderbolt, feemed to him thereby to be fer on fire, and he thereupon to leap for joy. He being stirred up with gladnesse, commands his Captains, that they fet the Souldiers in order, and expoundeth the dream but that ex into his re 01 For dream to i

thing who

fond has.

with Thu

rom, that

ed this ma

in the first montant no lelves, he

YN. P.

a fell t thridates la things to c s prosperor peaktoth ceth in his intaken b mends fra bies and] fore (infla more then Mithridat with him b away, hei Hiplicratio fore the Ki with a ma med the te that the K untill they Money and his pretion anto him

acertain f

come into

homenia 10 had pronot

pratt bein

a Pompez.

dream to his friends; as if he was to vanquith the City. Unto which thing when as others wonderfully agreed, the fight pleafed not Ly-fimachin. He faith, he feared, leaft as the places that were blafted with Thunderbolt, remain inaccessible, so the god fignified to Pyrrhm, that he was not to enter the City: When as Pyrrhm answered this man, Those were meer delusions, and full of uncertainty, but that every man holding weapons in his hands, ought to bring into his remembrance.

Optimum id augurium, pro Pyrrho exponere vitam.

Of Divination that's the chief, For Pyrrhus to adventure life.

In the first of the morning he sets upon the Ciry. But the Lacedes monians not sluggishly and beyond their strength, defending themselves, he was constrained to loose the siege. Platarch, in Pyrrhus.

N. Pompey, having followed King Mithridates unto Euphrates, fell by night. At which time it is blazed by report, that Mithridates saw a resemblance in his sleep, which foreshewed him things to come. It seemed to him to fail in the Pontick Sea, with a prosperous wind, and now to foresce Bosphorus, and courteously to speak to those that were carried together with him, as who rejoyceth in his fure and undoubted fafety: but fuddenly he was found forlaken by all, and toffed in a small broken piece of a Ship. His friends standing by, stirred him up, being busied with those troubles and Images, thewing that Pompey was at hand. A fight therefore (instead of a bulwark) being begun, he was overcome. Far more then ten thousand were flain, and the Camps were taken; Mithridates himself with a draught of eight hundred Horsemen with him brake through the Romans. By and by the rest sliding away, he is left alone with three, among whom was the Harlot Hipsieratia, who had alway been of a manly boldnesse: Where fore the King called her Hispicratia. But then the being cloathed with a man's Persian garment, and carried on a Horse, neither secmed the to be weary in body from the tediouineffe of the flight, neither the Kings body and horse being taken care of, was he tired untill they came unto the Towre or Castle Inor, where the Kings Money and Treasures were heaped up. Thence Mithridates took his pretious stones, which he distributed unto those that assembled unto him out of the flight. Moreover he gave a deadly poylon to a certain friend of his to be carried with him, left any one should come into the enemies hands. From thence he firives to go into Armenia to Tigranes. Which thing, when he forbade him, and had pronounced a hundred talents on his head, the Springs of Euphrates being passed by, he bends his flight through Colchis. Plusarch in Pompey.

Before

क्ट संदर हर्गड

Warr of

d: indeed

Cing might

enic Xexis

, with the

lmed, and

hed : This

xes had alew feemed

the was by

et at Ar-

ers on both

malt lying on through things be-

it combit

t, he (hould

ighting h

being then

of Royall

1. It 180

Traged

common

dy, whole

ppeaed n

ains, wh

cie things

expour-

But the

the Cap-

C ECIDECI-

petokened

Abanell

being firth

er of the

t. They

11ps 200

h inchi

a dream

Thunder.

coper to 山地 ndeth she

dras

246 An History of Dreams, Visions,

- Before the Pharsalian fight, it seemed to Cn. Pompey by night in his sleep, he entering into the Theatre, the people to applaud him; and that he adorned the Temple of Venus the Conqueresse with many spoils. This sight partly raised him up, partly made him carefull, fearing somewhat, least Grace and samousnesse should come from him unto Casars samily chanting on Venus, and some Panick sears awakened him out of sleep: In the fourth watch over Casars Camps, where all things were quier, a great light shinedout. A flaming Torch kindled thereby, was brought into Pompey's Camps. Casar himself said he saw this, while he went about the Watches. The same Author, in the same place.
- 69. Hecuba being great with young, the feemed to bring forth a burning Torch, which burned Afia and Europe. She not long after brought forth Paris, by whose unchast loves, the country of Tro, being destroyed, their forces being wasted, Greece was confumed by a long war, and undone. Sabellicus, book 1. ch. 1. Volatteran. book 18. Anthropol.
- 70. Cambyfes King of Persians, saw Smerdes (in his sleep) sitting in the Kings Throne, to touch the Heaven with his Crown. He for that thing, searing less his Brother Smerdes should possesse the kingdome; sent Prexaspes tokillhim. Neither yet could be avoid even this by his brother-killing Murther; whereby Smerdes the Magirian, who seigned himself to be the true Smerdes Son of Cyrus, should the lesse invade the Kingdome. Cambyses going up to horse, being wounded in the Thigh with a Sword, died. Herodotus, Book 3.
 - Arius had moved out of Sufa against Alexander, being supported with a multitude of Armies (for he had fix hundred theuland Souldiers under his Enfigns) trufting to a certain dream, the which (the Magitians flattering him) had interpreted more than according to the likenefle of truth. The troop of the Macedonians feemed to thine together with a great brightseffe of fire. But Alexander to wait on him in the habit wherewith he had been cloathed, when he was [Afcandes] that is, a Messenger, or [Ascantes] that is Chamberlain to the King: And when he had entred into the Temple of Belus, to have been withdrawn from before his eyes. By these things (in my opinion) God foreshewed that the Macedonians were to carry on honourable and famous matters, and Alexander to obtain Asia; as Darius had enjoyed it, being of a Messeuger or Chamberlain, made King, but in a short time to lay down his life with his glory. Plutarch, in Alexander. Curtius hath delivered, that the King imagined the Camps to shine with a great brightnesie. Sabellicus, Book 4. Ennead. 4.

They

1 out i

certain, t

wealth w

albort till

Princes.

E Zelim

came toge

of the floci

Patavine fit

called Roma

touched he

red as Snov

The chanc

and he Ez

Alberick,

But afterw

texth year.

the Guelphia

wh Palavin

Book post

con patient o

inercome in

Stother All

ne diffruite

the Califer

being betta

as caemies

and his wil

felf being s

father had

Fulgofus,

Robb

Sto put on

bubbleiba

to to the t

Othis Vill Petrancha

the

and mockings of Evil Spirits.

247

Hey report, Domitian to have dreamed that a bunch sprang out from him behind a Golden neck; and to have had it for certain, that a more bleffed and joyfull condition of the Commonwealth was foreshown to be after him. As indeed it so fell out in a thort time, through the abstinence and moderation of following Princes. Sucton.

Zeline, furnamed Mank, a bloudy and most cruel Tyrant, at his rest saw the forcune of his sons, that night in which he first came together with his wife, who was by name Adela, a Tufoian, of the stock of the ancient Earls of Montaion. For he seemed to himself to see a little hill, in which a Roman Town was (in the Patavine field) placed (the which he commanded, and was thence called Romanss or a Roman) fo to be carried up and exalted, that it rouched heaven with its top, and the same a little after, to be melted as Snow, and to to be let down, that it could no more stand up. The chances of his fons brought this effect : For the elder Son, and he Ezeline by name, possessed the rule of Verona, Patavium, Vincentia, Feltrium, and Cividal, and Marchia. But the younger, Alberick, entred on the Kingdom of Tarvifium, and other places. But afterwards, fortune changing, in the two hundred fifty and fixth year, above the thousandth of falvation, when as the Pope and the Guelphians together, had moved war against Ezeline his fon, he loft Patavium, with the whole land. But when he trusted that he should possesse the City of Mediolum by crast, and for that thing had passed over the River Abdua, being be sieged by his enemies, overcome in battell, a wound being received, being taken nigh to Sonsinum, in that very fame place he died, and was buried. His brother Alberick being strucken with fear by this chance, when as he distrusted that he could keep Tarvisium, he betook himself into the Castle of Saint Zeno. Where, in the year of Salvation, 1200. being betrayed by his own Souldiers, he came into the power of his enemies. There having beheld fix fons to be killed before him, and his wife Margaret with two young maids to be burnt, ite himfelf being cut through all his limbs by piece-meal, he faw (as his father had in his dreams) his Roman flock, or nation, to be ended.

"He Mother of Phalaris saw Mercury (whose Image holding a goblet in his hand, the worthipped at her own house, among the shapes of gods) in her dreams to sprinkle bloud on the ground out of that goblet, and being dashed on the pavement, to bubble back, untill by little and little it overflowed all the house up to the top. That which was feen in one, the bloudy cruelty of her for made crue in many houses. Pantieus Herachdus is the Author of this Vision, a learned man, as faith Tully, and Scholler of Plato.

Fulgofus, book 1. chap. 5. hora or from J. 19863 . I 2000 at early 740

Amilcar

BLB

THE

y night is to appland

congestelle

arrly made

amountie Tenus, and

orth watch

t light (li-

nt into Pos-

WEBt about

ng forth a

ne not long

country of

2 Was con-

, I. Velau-

) fitting a

NOWD, Th

postesse th

ld he avoil

es the Mr

n of Com

p to both

Herodalu

being lay

x hundred

in dream.

eted meet

R MARIE

ffire, le

been clas

(Maiss ntred into his eyes

10 CASSI

and Als.

a Meller

lay-down

th delive

ar bright

Milcar Captain of the Carthaginians, belieging Syracufa, feemed to hear in his fleep, that the next day after he should fup within the walls of the befieged City. By that thing being rurned to a hope of Conquest, he being chearfull, ser the Army in order in the morning to befrege the City. Unto him confidering and attempting such enterprises, as often comes to passe, a great uproar arose in the Camps, the Carthagenians and Sicilians disagreeing among themselves. The Townes-men laying hold of the occasion, come suddenly forth of the Gates, and their enemies being scattered, the Conquerours take their Captain, defiring to fuccour their ranks being diffurbed, and therefore neglecting himself. And so being brought into the City, supping in fetters, he understood what a talke expounder of the dream he had been. Valer. Max. Book I. chap. 7. and Cicero, Book 1. Of Divination. Artemidore writeth, a shew was presented to a certain one in his sleep, as that he should sup with Saturn; and it so happened, that the day following, he was cast into Prison. Calius, Book 13. chap. 21. Of Book of Antiq.

Upiter commanded T. Latinus, a man of the common people, in is fleep, that he should tell the Consulls that he was not plealed with the neighbouring Circean playes, of the leaders of the dance, which thing, unlesse being heeded, it were fatisfied by the renewing of sports, no small danger of the City was to follow. He fearing least with some disprofit unto his Religion, he should extoll the highest command, kept silence. And straightway his Son, being taken with the sudden force of a disease, died. He also at the time of Ileep, being asked by the same, whether he had sufficiently weighed the great punishment of his royall command neglected, continuing in his purpose, was recompensed with a weaknesse of his body. And then at length by the counsell of his friends, being brought in a horse-litter, unto the Consuls Judgment-seat, and from thence to the Senate, the order of his whole chance being explained, with the great admiration of all, the strength of his members being recovered, he returned home on his feet. Valevine, in book 1. chap. 7. Cicero, in book 1. Of Divination, And Livy, book 2. Decad. 1.

76.

He Tartars inhabit beyond the Mountain Belgia, the Sea lying between. Changius, or their fitst Emperour, law again a white horseman, who had foretold unto him the Empire, in his sleep, that it was the will of the immortal god, That in the Mountain Belgia being passed over, they should go forward into the West, and subdue all Kingdoms. But as soon as they had come to the Mountain Belgia, in that part which the Sea sloweth on the Mountain, that they should go down, and their saces being turned toward the East, they with nine bowings of the knee, worship the immortal therow the his book of the awa immorta.

he compe

cins. Buit was gil fembly, it was gil fembly, it he was conthe finape monished gious enter deprive hithe Sun; who feare yet it is d the place

V Alei the

he tryed

be placed

He being was calle marians or mas was a his whites i wered, i feeking a perour we hards a perour we hards.

ligently for perished, this Infer haid here laid man,

Titlat that weapons immortal God. Changim obeyed, and all his people being led out, he compelled them to continue all night in prayers. The morning being come, he saw the Sea to have went back from the Mountain, nine feet, and on that side he led his whole Army on dry ground thorow the waste wildernesses into Asia. Haithon the Armentan in his book of the Tartars.

Annibal, Captain of the Carthaginians, had decreed to carry Laway a golden pillar, being found in the Temple of Juno Lucina. But being not fure, whether it was of found gold, or whether it was gilded with gold nigh the superficies, by solemnizing an affembly, he cryed it, and being made fure, that it was all of gold, he was confirmed in his purpose of snatching it away; unto whom the shape of Juno seemed to be present, while he dreamed: she admonished him, that he should abstain from covetous and sacrilegious enterprizes ¿Ethreatening, if he proceeded, that the would deprive him of one eye wherewith he should see the ground, or the Sun; with which fleep, the Captain otherwise cruell, and who feared no god, there was no Religion, as was written of him, yer it is delivered, being moved, he daring to move nothing out of the place of that very gold, which had fallen out of a hole while he tryed it, he took care to have a warlike Engine made, and to be placed on the top of the pillar. Petrarcha.

V Alens, Emperour, in his fleep, faw a certain man, faying thefe words unto him;

Be gone with haste unto great Mimas: thee the grievous force Of destiny, dreading thy self, shall from thy life divorce.

He being awakened out of fleep, asked the standers by, VVhat place was called Mimas? And when at length, a certain one of the Grammarians or Oratours, who follow the Kings Court, had said, Mimas was a Mountain of Asia, of which Homer had made mention in his Ulystes: And to aiery Mimas. The Emperour laughing, answered, VVhat necessity enforcesh me of seeing this place, and seeking a lot? But when, fighting against the Alanians, the Emperour was burnt in a little cottage about Adranopolis of Thracia, the Barbarians departing from thence, some Souldiers of Valens diligently searched out his dead carcass. In that cottage where he perished, was found an old grave of a certain ancient man, with this Inscription, Mimas a Governour of the Macedonians, was here laid. Therefore that dream of Valens was sulfilled. Cuspianian.

That which was once set before Julius Cafar in his sleep, before that he had moved into neather France, and brought offensive weapons on the City, when at his rest, it seemed to him, he ravish-

0-

78.

racola, lee.

be (hould

e Army in confidence c, a steat

telians di-

ng hold di

and their

Captain,

thereion

City, top

der of the

7. and Ci-

, a theu

thould for

llowing, to

Of Boos of people, I

ers of the

fied by th

flow. He should ex-

ay his Son,

He also st

mand not

ith a weak is friends

ment-less

ance being

trength d

feet Pale

Sea lying

na white

re, in his

the Well,

ne to the

the Mountained to ed his mother: By which dream, the expounders firred him up unto a most large hope, having interpreted, That the rule of the world should be given him. The same dream they mention, was offered to Hippias, son of Pifistratus, with no unlike islue, who being his succeeder in tyranny, used his Countrey more cruelly. For a night refemblance of his Mother, with whom he feemed to copulate, is faid to be fet before him at the time of fleep; for which thing the Interpreters answered, That rule was largely betokened unto him. And he being put in mind by his dream, and full of hope, not long after he enjoyed the dominion of Atheus. For this is that Hippias, who having attempted a tyrannical power, not without cruel wickednesse, was more outragious and unbridled than his father, when as being a banished man, he had changed his foyl, he moved wicked arms against his Countrey. At last conspiring with Darius, being flain in the Marathonian fight, he yielded punishments to his Countrey and houshold gods. But another ion of the same rifistratus, Hipparch, who exceeded the cruelty of many Tyrants, when as he oppressed his Country and Citizens with a cruel Lordlinesse, a conspiracy being made against the life of the Tyrant, he was, by Armodius and Aristogiton, most valiane young men, not without the fafety of all, flain: whose names being devoted to freedom, lest at any time it should be lawfull to instirute servants, the Athenians established with an open abhorrency. Alexander, book 3. chap. 26.

- Safety years, which being finished, the god, which is worshipped at Thebes, was seen to say unto him, His reign over the Egyptians should not be happy, nor of long continuance, unless, the Priests of Egypt being all slain, he should passe thorow the midst of their dead carcasses with his. This dream being often set before him, he called together all the Priests on every side, and what things he had received through the dream being told them: He would not, he saith, build a remaining destruction for any one in Egypt, but had rather abstain from the Kingdom of Egypt, being pure and free of all wickedness. Diodore the Sicilian, & Herodotus, book 3.
- Sethon, King of Agypt, Priest of Vulcan, when as he despised the Egyptians, he made use of a forreign Souldier, and stripped the Egyptians of their fields. For this wrong, it came to pass, that after Sennacherib King of Arabians and Asyrians had invaded Egypt with a great Army, the Egyptians would not help him. Then the chief Priest, void of counsel, betook himself into the Garret or Chamber of his House, and there bewailed before the Image, how much he was in danger. Therefore while he was lamenting, sleep crept on him, and while he slept, the god seemed to stand by, exhorting him, that he was to suffer no hurtfull thing, if he went to meet the Army of the Arabians, for he would send him helpers.

The Price

men or la

the Egg

a great m

both the

Camps o

naked of

that Temp

in his han

let him be;

and mockigns of Evil Spirits.

251

The Priest trusting to these dreams, those that were willing of the Agyptians being taken, Merchants, or Factors, and handycraftsmen or labourers, he pitched his Tents in Pelusium; for, in this, is the Ægyptian invaded. When he had come thither, in the night, a great multitude of field-Mice fuddenly arifing, gnawed afunder both the quivers, bowes, and also the rains of the bucklers in the Camps of their enemies; fo that the next day, the enemies being naked of weapons, made flight, many being loft. And now in that Temple of Vulcan, the King stands in stone, holding a mouse in his hand, and by letters taying thele words; who so looketh on me; Let him be godly. Herodotus, book 2.

Kkz oj

IS,

red him up

rule of the

ention, was

ne, who be-

creelly, Fer

ned to copp-

for which

betokered

and full of

s. For this power, cor d unbridled ad changed

s fight, he s. Bur anthe cruelty and Citizens unft the lik nost valua names by wfull to is abhorressy

of AM

worthipped e Egyptism e Priests d lft of their sefore him, t things be old not be puthad rafree of all

te despised

d finpped

pals that invaded m. The Garretor nage, how ting, Acep nd by, exe west w helpers. The