The left page of the manuscript contains several staves of musical notation. The notation includes notes, stems, and clefs, though the specific details are somewhat faded and difficult to discern. The staves are arranged vertically down the page.

The right page of the manuscript is mostly blank, with very faint and illegible traces of musical notation. A prominent vertical stain, likely from a liquid spill, runs down the center of the page, obscuring any underlying text or notation. The paper is aged and shows signs of wear, including small spots and discoloration.
